Advice to students concerning the University's Regulations in relation to cheating in a University Test

1. Cheating in a University test is an offence under University Regulation 12, whether that test is conducted by means of a formally invigilated examination, or by the submission of a piece of assessed work.
2. Under regulations 12, cheating is defined as "an attempt to benefit oneself, or another, by deceit or fraud. This shall include deliberately reproducing the work of another person, or persons, without acknowledgement. A significant amount of unacknowledged copying shall be deemed to constitute prima facie evidence of deliberation, and in such cases the burden of establishing otherwise shall rest with the candidate against whom the allegation is made".
3. If the Authorised Body resolves that cheating has taken place it shall determine the penalty and inform the appropriate board of examiners and the student accordingly. The maximum penalty shall not normally exceed a mark of zero in the piece of assessed work to which the offence relates, but in appropriate cases the body concerned shall have the power to impose a more severe penalty, it being understood that such a penalty would be imposed without prejudice to the provision of the Discipline Regulations.
